

I write to comment on these proposed regulations regarding digital television. I believe the US Government and the FCC have been generally too quick to adopt these types of proposals from the entertainment industry. The Digital Millennium Copyright Act has already eroded important rights of individuals to use licensed content, and has made it impossible to do many things that are permitted under copyright law with the proper grants of rights because the necessary equipment and software is not being produced for fear of litigation. The current proposal only exacerbates this problem. The playing field is already tilted far too much in favor of the entertainment giants. This proposal will only make it more difficult for consumers and small artists to exercise rights they now have. It will constrict creativity and the advance of technology, and will lead to a further consolidation of market power in a group that has already proven itself to be anti-consumer, anti-artist, anti-technology, and pro- only toward lining its pockets at the expense of everyone else. Please stop this juggernaut before it damages America's creative and technological edge even more.
